Not illustrated. 1922 Excerpt: ...reactions and the sedimentations are more rapid in a hot-process softener than in a cold-process softener. Given sufficient steam, the water will be heated to approximately the boiling point, or higher if back pressure is carried. Boilers fed with water softened by Cochrane Hot-Process Softeners do not form scale, steam easily and with a minimum of priming. The lessened tendency to priming is due both to the absence of suspended matter in the water and to the fact that with hot water it is not necessary to feed an excessive amount of chemical reagents in order to secure perfect precipitation.
